STRANGULATION

Visible Signs (may not be present)

Additional Signs and Symptoms

Strangulation has only recently been identified as one of the most lethal forms of domestic violence; unconsciousness may occur within seconds and death within minutes. When domestic violence perpetrators choke (strangle) their victims, not only is the life of the victim threatened, but so is the life of the batterer. Strangulation is an ultimate form of power and control, where the batterer can demonstrate control over the victim's next breath and cause devastating psychological effects or a potentially fatal outcome.

Sober and conscious victims of strangulation will first feel terror and extreme pain. If strangulation persists, unconsciousness will occur. If strangulation is sudden, the victim will likely die. The victim will usually resist violence, often producing injuries of their own neck in an effort to claw off the assailant, and frequently bite the assailant's fingers. These defensive injuries may not be present if the victim is physically or chemically restrained before the assault.

Observing Changes

Documentation by photographs sequentially for a period of days after assault is very helpful in establishing a pattern of evidence.

Losing Consciousness

Victims may lose consciousness by any one or all of the following methods: blocking of the carotid arteries in the neck (depriving the brain of oxygen), blocking of the jugular veins (depriving the body of oxygen), pinching of the nostrils (depriving the body of oxygen), and closing off the airway, making breathing impossible.
